BRAND PERSONA

say 'hello'
to Mark

Mark

Age: 58

Location: Charleston, South Carolina

Occupation: Owner of a mid-sized construction company

Business Experience: 30+ years in business, self-made entrepreneur

Mark started his construction company in his early 20s with a few tools, a pickup truck, and a strong work ethic. Over three decades, he has built a successful, respected business in his local community. His business is family-run, with one of his children involved in day-to-day operations, but Mark hasn't formally planned what happens next.

Family: Married with two adult children, one of whom is involved in the family business

Values: Hard work, legacy, financial security, family loyalty

Financial Status: Comfortable, looking to retire in the next 5–7 years, concerned about long-term financial stability

Mark's Future: As he nears retirement, Mark realizes that the future of his company is uncertain. He's unsure how to transition leadership, properly value his business, or prepare financially for life after the sale. His biggest concern is securing the legacy he has worked a lifetime to build while ensuring his family's financial future. The emotional complexity of "letting go" weighs heavily on him, and he wants to make sure his business thrives even after he steps away.

When Mark searches for something, his queries tend to look like this.

Building a new website is like buying a Camaro.

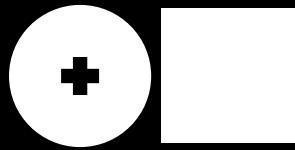

It might look incredible, but if you leave it in the garage, no one will notice. To really show it off, you need to take it on the road and show it to others. Just like driving through busy streets gets your car seen, sharing your website through social media, backlinks, and other platforms gets your site the attention it deserves. The more places it's linked, the more people will discover it and engage with what you have to offer.

By focusing on relevant keywords, we are setting up the website to be more easily found by the right audience.
